

NONGAME AND ENDANGERED WILDLIFE PROGRAM

Roster of Donors

(7/1/2007 - 12/31/2007)

Blanding's turtles and New England cottontail rabbits are two species identified in the New Hampshire Wildlife Action Plan as being in serious decline in the Granite State. Both are species of special concern – and both species are at risk of disappearing from New Hampshire.

Thanks to the many donors who responded to the Fall 2007 Appeal, we are now working to identify sites where New England cottontails are present and to protect the best habitat areas for this species from future development and habitat loss. As of March 2008, biologists had already surveyed 20 sites. During the spring of 2008, nongame biologists will review and analyze 2007 Blanding's turtles surveys and select new sites to survey in 2009.

Identifying the best habitat areas and protecting them from future development are crucial to ensuring the future survival for both New England cottontails and Blanding's turtles populations in New Hampshire. This work is being made possible because of the generosity of our supporters. Thank you!

John J. Kanter
Nongame and Endangered Wildlife Program Coordinator
